THIS IS UNEVALUATED INFORMATION

1. [redacted] Aviation Training Schools have been established in the following towns: Minsk, Saratov, Chkalov, Rostov on the Don, Vologda, Alma-Ata, Tashkent, Ufa, Leningrad, Molotov, Ryazan'.

2. Aviation Training Schools are connected with Military Aviation Units and Military Aviation Schools located in the vicinity of Training Schools. Military Aviation Units and Military Aviation Schools provide Aviation Training Schools with visual training aids, books on military discipline and, if necessary, lecturers as well. Books and other training aids are turned over to Training Schools by Military Aviation Units on a permanent loan basis and need not be returned.

3. The mission of the Aviation Training Schools is to prepare well-trained candidates for Military Aviation Schools. On the basis of the Training Schools' experience, the Sovorov and Malkhimov schools were later established.

4. Aviation Training Schools do not have their own aircraft and do not teach their students to fly.

5. When the Aviation Training Schools were first organized, students wore dark-blue uniforms: jackets with light blue lapel tabs and dark blue trousers with light blue piping. Over the lapel tabs they wore aviation insignia: wings with a propeller. The headgear was a dark blue cap with light blue bands and edges. After the war, the lapel tabs were replaced by light blue shoulder loops with black edges. The teaching staff of Aviation Training Schools wears the same type of uniform worn by Soviet Air Force officer personnel.

6. Students belonging to Aviation Training Schools engage in ground training only. The classes attended by the students are well manned and provide general education as well as military training. The classes for military training are equipped with airplane engines, airplanes, aviation equipment, rifles, sub-
